

To Hear Cheery Holiday Clinks: Start Catering Your Drinks

Parties are immense fun, but most of us just can't handle the stress of organizing such large scale events. Hence, of course, the evolution of people like wedding planners, who somehow have the skills and the know-how to pull off extreme-anxiety inducing events, without a problem. Of course, not everyone feels comfortable doing this, and most people just hire a caterer, and deal with the rest themselves, because that's the most difficult part. Your party will be a lot easier to handle, as well as more interesting for your guests, if you were to order beverage catering as well. This is something that if your chosen caterers don't cover for you, the drinks are often ignored or relegated the position of 'do it yourself.'

Depending on the size of the party, you can go all out and order an all-inclusive package for catering beverages, which includes drinks, a bar, and professional bartenders to serve the drinks to your guests. This can be a fun thing for cocktail parties, beach parties, or birthday parties, but can also lend a formal air to private functions, inaugural parties, office parties, and christenings. Most caterers will allow you to explain the tone of your event, and they may have good suggestions about exactly which of their packages will suit yours the best.

For example, most beverage caterers differentiate between corporate events and private events, and they will explain the differences in their proposed services for the two. Make sure to look at these before you pick one, because while you may be hosting an office Christmas party for your team, you may be really close with them, while a thanksgiving reunion with your entire extended family with numerous disapproving aunts and uncles may seem like a more formal event.

Nearly every beverage caterer will have a range of non-alcoholic drinks for you to choose from, that you can choose to include in your bar for underage drinkers or people who don't appreciate alcoholic drinks. In case you are planning an event where all alcohol may be frowned upon, like a religious gathering, or a party for teenagers below the legal drinking age, you don't have to forego the decorative effect of having a bar with professional bartenders attend to your party. (The teenagers would most likely appreciate it). Simply choose from an array of mocktails (non-alcoholic cocktails), smoothies, soda, juices, or sparkling beverage options, and they'll have the fun that they would otherwise be missing out on.

If you're not comfortable hiring an entire package, there are other things you can do. If you already have a mini-bar, or someplace to hold your party that comes with a bar, you won't need anyone for catering drinks. You would need people to serve them, so you can hire waiters and bartenders alone. Conversely, if you prefer serving yourself, or you think your guests would rather fetch their drinks themselves, check if the caterers provide mobile bars for hire.

So whether you need professionals for catering beverages, or you just need a mobile bar you can take with you to your beach house for a summer party, there are a wide variety of ways you can improve any party you throw, so that the events that you organize are hassle free for you, and more enjoyable for everyone else.
